The elephant story

The elephant is an extraordinary animal hardly ever seen in Europe until public zoos were created (in Vienna in 1779 or in London 1828 for the oldest). Before that, with the legendary exception of Hanibal's was elephants that accompanied his campaign through the Alps, no one had ever seen an elephant on that side of the Mediterranean Sea.

Possessing such an exotic animal as an elephant, tiger, lion or leopard was considered to be a token of wealth and power and the sole privilege of the highest aristocracy.

In 1552, Maximillian II was the Archduke of Austria and about to become the Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire. He was 25 years old and had recently married Mary of Spain. On his way back from Spain, he brought with him one of his wedding presents: an elephant called Soliman. The Sultan Soliman the Magnificent was, at that time, Austria's most terrible enemy. Therefore, domesticating such a powerful animal named after such a figure was a significant symbol.

Maximilian stopped at the best inn in Ljubljana with his escort and the wonderful animal that tremendously impressed the population. Later, on the site of this inn, the Hotel Slon was built. The memory of Soliman the elephant was still very strong in the city, so the guesthouse and, later, the hotel were named "Slon" (the Slovenian word for elephant).

The origin of the Slon hotel should be set in themed 19th Century (1856 and 1858) when a new hotel building was built. The hotel in that period was renowned for its baths, which were visited by numerous wealthy citizens of Ljubljana. The hotel building lived on for 80 years; it even survived the powerful earthquake of 1895.

In 1937, construction of the new Hotel Slon began, in accordance with the modernist architecture fashion of the 1230s. Crowds of local people came to the construction site to observe the new hotel growing in front of their eyes. When completed, it was said to be the most beautiful and the most modern hotel in Ljubljana.
